CREATIVE SCHOLARLY WORKS

- 2015 Aeolian Politics. An ethnographic/interactive art installation at the Emmanuel Gallery, Denver, CO (November), in collaboration with Dominic Boyer and the Ethnographic Terminalia Collective that was comprised of a built environment, a “wind house,” that utilized high capacity fans, video footage and interior spaces to represent the turbulent wind of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and the contentious political atmospheres surrounding wind power development in the region. Visitors were calculated to be in excess of 1000 in a three-day period.
- 2017 Nerd Nite, Austin. “Nerd Nites” are venues in several US cities where scholarly work and expertise is highlighted in a performative form, usually (and most successfully) with clever humor involved. This performance, co-elaborated by myself, Dominic Boyer and Daniel Aldana Cohen built upon an idea the three of us had been developing on “low carbon leisure and low carbon pleasure.” Each participant crafted a set of activities that are both engaging and near zero carbon in their impact/output. The video of the event is available on YouTube and the skits form the basis for a handbook we are developing on the same theme.
- forthcoming Unda: A Graphic Novelette of Lived Energy (second author with Laura Watts and Geoffrey Bowker). Currently under review for inclusion in the edited volume Alien Energy, the graphic novelette depicts a maritime journey of a young woman afflicted with the capacity to sense all electromagnetic waves that she is exposed to (satellite, electric, radar) and how she is able to shift this affliction to a state of heightened attunement to the electromagnetic properties of contemporary life. The novelette is based on the research of the three authors who work on different social science aspects of energy and STS. While the novelette is fully based in empirical work and fact, the form of a graphic novel is meant to invite new readings of scholarly work and to encourage experimental forms of exposition.
- forthcoming Not Ok. Currently being edited and voiceover recorded. This 40-minute ethnographic film emerges from two periods of research in Iceland on “cryohuman” relations in the context of a rapidly changing climate. By creating a documentary film, my intention is to reach a wider audience through festival screenings and ultimately, free availability online. Okjökull (Ok glacier) is the first named glacier in Iceland to be declassified as a glacier due to ice loss. Iceland’s 400+ glaciers now lose 11,000,000,000 tons of ice per year and scientists predict that by 2170 all of Iceland’s glaciers will be gone. Depictions about the impacts of a warming world are often cast in epic proportions, as in films like Chasing Ice and Al Gore’s Inconvenient Truth series; in these works, climate change is so massively scaled and overwhelming that humans are essentially positioned as helpless to do anything about it. In Not Ok, the phenomenon of disappearing glaciers is brought to a human scale. It tells the story of a tiny glacier, on a small mountain, in a little country at the top of the world. This small tale, of course, is meant to represent a greater, global concern.
- 2016-present Cultures of Energy Podcast. This weekly podcast which I co-host was initiated to highlight the scholarship within The Center for Energy and Environmental Research in the Human Sciences and to share the work of scholars visiting Rice whose research touches upon environmental humanities and social sciences. The podcast conversations are a dialogue rather than an interview and involve discussing the past and present work of the guest as well as current events and related research. Each runs approximately one hour. All of the podcasts are available free online and on itunes. After two years, as of December 2017, the podcast has had over 115,000 downloads and we have featured the work of more than 100 scholars from a range of disciplines including anthropology, geography, sociology, history, philosophy, environmental studies, economics, literature, and critical theory as well as a handful of prominent fiction authors, filmmakers, sound artists, photographers, multimedia artists and activists.
